are few people in Fairfax who have not heard of Ben Hatton. He died on the war he acquired considerable noamusement. A staunch Union man, he was compelled by Mosby to pilot his command to the camp of the enemy near Flying Pan during one of his cel-ebrated raids, and in the excitement that followed Hatton was the only man that received a wound, which was in-titled by one of Mosby's men who, mistaking him for a federal soldier, shot him in the thigh. When the time for regular election was out of the question. A few people, recognizing Ben's absolute unfitness for the place, cast Ben claimed his election and tried for a number of years to get Congress to recognize the justness of his claim to the salary. There were many other incidents in his life that would prove entertaining if related, but now that the poor old fellow has gone to his grave, they need not be repeated.
